Siennà set out to create a very personal and unique avant-garde sound based on a truly eclectic approach.

This act is not afraid to draw from different influences and getting up close and personal with the music, and brand new single "I know why" is no exception. The song is a compelling blend of alternative rock, dream-pop and electronica, echoing artists the likes of Blonde Redhead, Portishead or Minus The Bear, just to name a few.

The song is structured around a beautiful electric guitar riff, arpeggiating a soft and dense melody. The guitar work is absolutely remarkable because of the way it interacts with the vocals and synth: embracing them, without overpowering them. The song's official video (which you can view above) is a great complement to the wide and dreamy soundscapes of the track: simple and personal footage that feels as honest and as direct as the actual music.

The candle-lit musical backdrop is complemented by cool vocal performances drenched in reverb, adding to the hazy and laid-back vibe of the single. The interaction between the male vocals and the main female lines in the song is also one of the most distinctive traits of the entire track: the pair is all about creating the right chemistry, whether singing their "solo" verses or creating beautiful harmonies together.
